A: Since you already mention 'wget' in your answer, I'd like to tell you how to download data directly from the command line. wget can be used to download a URL, by: wget URL_to_download It will download the specified URL and all its sub-directories. You may need to use -N to stop the recursive download. wget -N -r -t 5 -nv -k -p -e robots=off -S "" Use -t and -nv to control the number of files to download and the write-to-disk-setting. Use -r and -k to specify the range of the directory to download. I think -p stops the use of proxies. -S and -E are the URL of the download and the target of the download, respectively. The flag -k can be used to override the check for file existence on the target file system. -e the robot flag. I hope this helps. -N stands for No-Follow -t the number of files to download -r the range of the directory to download -v the verbosity -w the download method (w = Wait, f = First, b = Bandit, j = Jobs) -p the options of wget (see options in man page of wget) -S the URL to download -E the target directory to download to -k the target file Four-year follow-up of early metabolic and morphologic changes in some cerebral tissues in children after renal transplantation: a possible role of growth hormone and insulin-like growth factor-1. In children treated by renal transplantation (RTx) and in those with chronic renal insufficiency (CRI), an impaired growth and a reduced catch-up growth are well known. Early structural changes of cerebral tissue are involved in the pathophysiology of these growth disturbances. Since a growth hormone (GH) and insulin-like growth factor-1 (IGF-1) excess is accompanied by modifications in the protein expression of cerebral tissue, we investigated such changes. We studied 60 children transplanted (TG: n = 30; CRI: n = 30). On a study day (day 1) CT-brain scanning (before and after contrast) was performed in both groups; immunochemistry was used to 50b96ab0b6
